after fell into a dose from which he awakened about six o'clock, and hearing no noise, he got up and wont into the next reom, where to his horror he discovered as unjortunate wife with her throat cut almost from our to ear, lying upon the floor weltering in blood, her head resting over the side of the cradle in which she used to rock the child to whom she was so much attached. A physician was summoned by the distracted husband, but the poor creature was quite dead. On looking into the cradle, a razor was found, with which, of course, she must have committed this n elancholy and depiorable act. Her husband had previously taken his razor, and carried it about with him in his coat pocket, fearing she might de herself some injury, and she discovered it, and must have taken it out after she got up, as the case was found in the pocket.
